VOICES

FROM

SPIRIT-LAND

THROUGH

NATHAN FRANCIS WHITE,

MEDIUM.

"In earth and heaven, sea and air,
God's Spirit moveth—everywhere!
And speaketh, wheresoe'er a voice
Uplifts to sorrow or rejoice."—Schiller

[Selected Poems]

NEW YORK:

1854.
ENTERED, ACCORDING TO ACT OF CONGRESS, IN THE YEAR 1854, BY PARTRIDGE AND BRITTAN,

IN THE CLERK'S OFFICE OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

NEW YORK STEREOTYPE ASSOCIATION,
201 William Street.

MAN, GRAY & Co., Printers
Holman, New York.
TO THE

FRIENDS OF TRUTH

AND

SPIRITUAL FREEDOM

(WITHOUT WHICH ALL OTHER FREEDOM IS A SHADOW),

THESE

Voices from Spirit-Land

IN SO FAR AS

T H E   M E D I U M

THROUGH WHOM THEY WERE UTTERED

IS CONCERNED,

ARE

_Humbly Inscribed._
INTRODUCTION.

How beautiful and consoling to believe, with Coleridge, that there is a Spirit-ladder—

"That from this gross and visible world of dust,
Even to the starry world, with thousand rounds,
Builds itself up, on which the unseen powers
Move up and down, on heavenly ministries;
The circles in the circles, that approach
The central sun, with ever-narrowing orbits."

Such, perchance, was the ladder Jacob saw in rapt vision; and such, to the aspiring soul, have ever pierced the skies, linking the visible with the invisible, the mortal with the immortal. Those were blessed eras in the history of humanity, when a simple and true faith opened the eyes of the pure to behold, and unloosed their tongues to converse with, the angels and ministering spirits of the Almighty, and even to hold direct communion with God himself. In all Christendom, men believe in the reality of those eras, and accept as sacred the revelation which records to us the familiar intercourse between the inhabitants of earth and the inhabitants of heaven. Nor is such belief irrational, if it be indeed true that God is alike the Creator and Father of all spirits. The sublime prayer of the accepted Son of God, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven," confirming the Old Testament by the New, teaches us that the realm of divine bliss—the true Spirit-Land—is neither here nor there, but everywhere, and that as "the pure in heart shall see God," whatever the outward condition of our being, so is heaven, the immortal Paradise, wherever in the universe a pure spirit dwells. In no revelation is it taught that communion between mortals and immortals has been, or will be, denied to the pure in spirit. Nor has any revelation taught, nor does human reason teach, that an intercourse, once enjoyed, may not at all times and forever, be enjoyed under similar circumstances and conditions. And how much stronger is our faith in the power of communion between spirits of earth and heaven, when we are taught that the Spirit-Land is open not only to the vision of the pure and perfect, but that God and his angels have deigned to repeatedly renew their primal intercourse with the erring and imperfect? Truly the Psalmist could say of the blessed God: "If I make my bed in hell He is there;" or, "If I take the wings of the morning, and flee away, He is there"—his love is without weariness, and "His mercy endureth forever."

All revelations, or scriptures, and the ever-open and unalterable pages of nature, upon which religions, or faiths in the hereafter, are founded, teach, in some degree, a relation and intercourse between the finite and the Infinite, through the medium of spirit. This is the vital essence of the Christian's belief. Without this, his religion is as cold and unconsoling as the most skeptical philosophy that ever sacrificed upon the altar of human pride the universal instinct of humanity—a belief in a wise, paternal, and bountiful God. And every Christian equally believes that, in ages past, at least, man has walked with God upon the earth; that angels have descended to console, warn, and variously minister unto men; that living men have been translated, while yet in the flesh, to the special presence of God, and that spirits of men who have once walked the earth have been permitted to reappear unto mortals, as it were to remove the last, lingering doubt, of the intimate connection between God's Spirit-children of earth and heaven. If this were not true—if this inspiring belief were not justified, then the record of the Garden of Eden were a fable; then the pages of the prophets were a fiction; then Moses heard not and saw not God; then were not Enoch and Elijah caught up to heaven; then Jesus descended not, nor arose from the sepulcher; nor were comforting angels with Peter in prison, nor did John behold in Patmos a prophet descending from the skies.

How clear it is in the light of the accepted record of the past, what we must believe in regard to spiritual existence and relations, if we believe at all. And since not to believe—not to have some faith in this regard—is the bitterest cup of human wretchedness, believe we must. We desire felicity too keenly to deny what reason accepts as the highest necessity of our existence. Let us ask, then, since the Spiritualism of the past-interfused through all religions, and literature, and creeds, and castes—is accepted as rational, essential, and beautiful, why a corresponding, though less pretentious, Spiritualism of the present should be rejected? Has the character of God, or the needs and character of man changed? Is the soul's longing impertinent to-day, that was tenderly responded to by its Creator one thousand or six thousand years ago? Is it less rational that an angel should comfort a Peter, or a prophet's spirit appear unto a John to-day, than that these things have occurred in other, remoter times? And if, of old, from unlettered fishermen God selected media and apostles, and fired their tongues with more than mortal eloquence and truth, may He not of even the untempered clay of our times, select vessels through which to pour the light and glory of his Spirit? Surely, if there was a betrayer, a denier, and a doubter among the "Twelve," and if a Magdalen was found worthier than many daughters of the Pharisees, we can not believe mankind in our own day unworthy of as close communion and as tender regard as God ever vouchsafed to man. On the contrary, as mankind progress in intelligence, and humanity is more universally developed and recognized as related to God, it is rational that the communion of God's Spirit-children with God and with one another, should become more and more intimate and universal. Therefore it is that, in the main, the Spiritualism of all times is to us acceptable and beautiful. Its "Manifestations" in the present are not dissimilar to its "Revelations" in the past. Both meet and answer the same universal need—a need that has not ceased at any time, and which can not cease while the mortal state exists.
INTRODUCTION.

But there are some evidences, we conceive, which should especially convince us that we are perpetually surrounded and influenced by superior powers and intelligences—in short, by the Spirit of God, of angels, and of those who, before us, have, like ourselves, walked the earth. Evidences like these were not wanting in other days; why should they be now? Let us reason this matter kindly and fairly together, for it has to do, if we are indeed germinating toward immortality, with the highest and holiest concerns of our being. Of old, men were endowed, as is recorded, with supernatural gifts of speech, with diverse tongues, with the power of healing, and to work wonders among men. That was Spiritualism in times not so remote as to be lost in myth and tradition—times historical and veritable, the spiritual records of which are accredited and venerated by the Christian world. Has the Spiritualism of our day done or claimed more! Is it, if its manifestations correspond with the older revelations, less credible, less entitled to belief and respect! Does the mere lapse of time change principles that are, in the nature of things, fixed and eternal! We can not think so, lest we should confound both our reason and our faith. This very volume, to which we are attempting a feeble and perhaps unbefitting introduction, is to our mind, cognizant as we are of the facts concerning it, a special proof, though but one of multitudes of similar constantly developing evidences, that man, aye, very imperfect man, is made—as he ever has been, at periods—a particular instrument for the revelation of God's purposes and spirit, and the possible fraternal intercourse of all God's Spirit-children.

Here is a volume of more than two hundred pages, spoken and written in obedience to superior influences by one who, in a normal condition, possesses no such power of utterance. This volume of VOICES From Spirit-Land is, to our belief, no more the conscious product of the MEDIUM through whom its utterance is claimed to have occurred, than it is the work of some Patagonian yet unborn. Why do we believe thus! Simply because this Medium is known, and has been from his infancy, by as many and as rational and reputable witnesses, perhaps, as ever confirmed equally interesting facts; witnesses whose testimony with all the formality of the oath, could be given, if it were deemed necessary, in proof that, except as an involuntary medium, he never has displayed the slightest tendency or capacity for such utterance. It is to him as verily an unknown tongue as was ever given to prophet or apostle. He can not evoke it, nor exorcise it to silence when, by some superior power, it is evoked. It takes possession of his hand and tongue, speaking whether he will or no; and to himself, when free from its Spell, it is, more than to all who behold it, a wonder and a mystery. And yet no mystery, when the philosophy of spirit-intercourse is embraced and understood. When the poet Gray, immortal through his "Elegy," if he were not—else, was reproached in that he wrote so little, he replied, in a letter to a friend: "I by no means pretend to inspiration, but yet I affirm that the faculty in question is by no means voluntary. It is the result, I suppose, of a certain disposition of mind, which does not depend on one's self, and which I have not felt this long time. You that are a witness how seldom this spirit has moved me in my life, may easily give credit to what I say." If so naturally bountifully gifted a soul as Gray's could confess so much, how much more earnestly may the Medium of this volume claim special inspiration for its utterance!
INTRODUCTION.

He, without one natural gift tending to poesy, and with but small conception and a meager embrace, in his normal state, of the ideas and sentiments, the scope and spirit of what has been uttered through, him, may well claim that inspiration "does not depend on one's self." He may say with Pope, though with an hundred-fold force:

"As yet a child, and all unknown to fame,
I lisped in numbers, for the numbers came!"

It is scarcely to be expected that the materialistic critic and reader will not smile incredulously. To such, arguments and facts that do not tally with their prejudices, bigotries, and conceits are as the idle wind. But to Spiritualists—to those whose experience has enlarged their perception and quickened their faith—there is nothing of claim set up for these VOICES that is not intelligible and reasonable. It is to such that we are particularly speaking. If the Spiritualisms of mankind had been left to the judgment of those whose lives and beliefs they rebuked and opposed, they would always have been what their enemies of today would fain brand them. But, thank God, they are mightier than the scorn, and pride, and ignorance, and prejudice, and castes, and creeds of human invention.

Many who read this volume will have read the "Epic of the Starry Heaven," uttered through Thomas L. Harris—a marvelous utterance; and yet, this volume to us appears more remarkable. Mr. Harris is a natural poet, highly gifted in his normal state, and cultivated by observation, experience, and reflection. Though less mightily, his voluntary song bad lifted our hearts and thrilled our spirits long ere his sublimer involuntary utterance. Our wonder, even at the loftiest utterance from such a soul, could but be less than if we heard a dumb, ungifted tongue suddenly break forth in rapturing strains, or Saw a blank page suddenly bloom with truth and beauty under the involuntary motion of an undisciplined hand. Such a tongue and hand, save when influenced by some superior invisible power, has the Medium of these VOICES from the Spirit-Land—Nathan F. White. A gentle-hearted, simpleminded young man; diffident and unpretending in whatever sphere; with only the limited common-school education of a humble New England farmer's son; a daily hand-toiler since his early youth; without imagination or ideality beyond the measure of Pollock's happy man,

"Who thought the moon no bigger than his father's shield"—
Is it not indeed surprising that such a one, if the spiritual philosophy be rejected, should break forth in a voice, new and startling to himself, and with fiery tongue scourge evils, and picture characters to his observation, reading, and experience unknown! All this Mr. White has done—done in the presence of multitudes of unimpeachable witnesses—in the presence of opposers and scoffers of Spiritualism, who, nevertheless, have not had the hardihood to deny the integrity of the Medium, or dispute facts occurring under their own eyes. What renders the utterances of Mr. White still more remarkable, is the fact that their ideas and teachings were mainly opposed, in so far as Spiritualism is concerned, to his education, prejudices, and belief, and to those of his fathers before him.

Mr. White was born in the then town of Derby (now Seymour), Connecticut, November 16, 1827 Until within three years past his life has been quietly passed in that State, in the town of his birth, save a period passed, while learning the engraver's art, at New Haven. All who have known him at all intimately, from childhood to the present hour, know equally well that the utterance of poetry has been, and is, as foreign to his natural tendencies and capacities, as the prospect of his becoming the Grand Llama of Thibet. They know, also, that he has been, and is, incapable of disguise or deception. They may believe him under the influence of evil spirits, if they please; but they must believe him under the influence of some spirit superior to his own. For several years prior to his spiritual impressment he was a devoted member of an "Orthodox" Christian sect. And not notwithstanding his normal sense and faith have been enlarged by his Spirit-intercourse, until he must needs reject the dogmas and errors of that sect, its communion has not been withdrawn from him, nor have the purity and piety of his life been questioned. Mr. White's Spirit-intercourse began, under remarkable circumstances, some three and a half years ago. Visiting with a friend, a medium, at Bridgeport Connecticut, the first manifestations he witnessed excited only his mirth and ridicule. Soon after, when in the solitude of his own room, he found himself becoming a medium of the very manifestations—rappings—he had ridiculed. He still persistently regarded them as unmeaning and mischievous. In this condition of mind he remained for a long time, becoming daily more and more developed as a medium. Even when he found himself an involuntary agent for the communication of ideas and truths, he was slow to believe it was not some delusion. About this period he removed to the city of Troy, New York, where he has since resided, pursuing his profession of engraver, and where he has been made the medium of extraordinary incidents and revelations, among which may be numbered the utterance of these VOICES from Spirit-Land.

After six months of rapping mediumship, Mr. White was developed as a writing medium, and a year later, as a speaking medium, and is now, by turns, impressed to all these modes of communication. In so far as he has been made aware, he was first impressed by the spirit of an Indian chief—Powhattan, which spirit continues at times to impress him, particularly when other spirits fail. Under the influence of Powbatten, Mr. White has been made to speak in the presence of and with living "Red men," in the Indian tongue, and to manifest all the peculiarities of the Indian in a surprising manner. Under the influence of other spirits he has been made to speak in various languages, with all the case and grace of persons native to them; and to write in German, or Hebrew, or Arabic, with a rapidity and perfection of chirography impossible to natural skill.

At the period of Mr. White's first impressment, he was in feeble health, afflicted with bleeding at the lungs, and other symptoms of pulmonary disease. Under Spirit-influence, his health has been completely restored, and his voice, previously weak, rendered strong and loud—as those can testify who have been startled by his "war-whoop," when thus influenced by his favorite spirit; Powhattan. Some months since, at the earnest solicitation of friends in Troy, and elsewhere, who had been witnesses of his remarkable manifestations, and desired the publication of son* of his utterances in a volume, Mr. White visited New York, where his mediumship was subjected to the severest tests without, in the slightest degree, shaking its claims. The writer of this had, on those occasions, ample opportunity to study the natural character and powers of Mr. W., and to satisfy himself that deception was utterly impossible. We saw Mr. W. under all the forms of Impression—Rapping, Writing, and Speaking—and if the matter communicated had failed to convince us of the presence of some superior spirit, we should have been convinced by the physical phenomena presented. The slowly-growing rigidity, death-like pallor, spasmodic tremors, and icy-cold sweat gathering like "beaded dew" upon the brow of the Medium while in process of entrancement, preparatory to speaking, were what no man could counterfeit. And when the voice issued, as it were from a body dead to outward impression and appearance, the veriest skeptic felt that this was more than mortal.

In permitting this volume to go before the public, Mr. White has Yielded to the wishes of the large circle of friends by whom he is esteemed and beloved, rather than consulted his own inclinations. He knows not by whose spirits the VOICES were dictated, and only knows that they were uttered at intervals, through his hand and tongue, often but a few lines at a trance, and sometimes to the extent of more than a hundred lines. It is evident from the subject-matter, that more than one spirit dictated; style, flow, and force of expression indicate this. The higher qualities of the various poems are their truth, clearness, earnestness, and directness. Here and there is a sting of biting sarcasm worthy of Pope or Byron, or a flash of intellect and fancy that reminds of Shelley. But the pervading spirit is force rather than brilliancy. The song breathes with a noble humanity and lofty faith. It appeals for Freedom, Justice, and Truth. It scourges cant, hypocrisy, and all uncharitableness. It fully accords with the philosophy of Spiritualism. To only three or four of the poems were titles given by the dictating spirits. The rest have been supplied according to the judgment of their editor, as also the title of the volume itself. Since the manuscripts of the poems passed into the publishers' hands, Mr. White has not seen them, nor has he seen any of the proof-sheets of the volume. He is as ignorant of book-making as the child unborn. Any defects, therefore, apart from the VOICES themselves, which stand precisely as uttered, must be charged to others than Mr. W. and his impressing-spirits.

It is not necessary to say more. VOICES FROM SPIRIT-LAND will be welcomed, we doubt not, in the circles and by the firesides of all Spiritualists. Let none fear that, whatever other qualities they may possess, they utter one word to contaminate—one line for evil. They are not unworthy of notice from the intellectual, while teethe humbler spirit they will bring food for reflection, and perchance light, strength, and consoling balm.

C. D. S.
INVOCATION.

SPIRIT divine, eternal and immortal,
   By whom all things created live and move;
Who holds't the keys that open every portal
   Of this vast universe of light and love;
Who hast vouchsafed all things that we inherit,
   So not to chance is left a shade or tissue
To shape our destiny—mind, body, spirit
   From being's smallest need to its immortal issue,
Thee we invoke! O let thy love divine
Speed the Truth, since all of truth is thine.

Spirit beneficent! if so thy ministers,
   Angels, or spirits of the freed of earth
Alike thy servants and thy worshipers
   Have spoken aught to quicken or give birth
Through mortal lips to Freedom, Truth, and Love;
   Faith, Hope, and Charity, and Blessedness;'
Or aught, or all that lifts the soul above
   Material things, Thou wilt their utterance bless,
Though poor and weak the mortal tongues they borrow,
To waken mortal joy and lessen mortal sorrow.
INVOCATION.

Spirit all-merciful! since first to being
Thou didst from chaos and from darkness call
With hand omnipotent and eye all-seeing—
All forms, all life, vast suns and atoms small,
Thou has not left one sparrow e'er to perish,
Nor yet one hair unnumbered e'er to fall,
But with all-mighty love dost keep and cherish,
And guide, and guard, through tender mercy, all,
Making the universe to glorify
Thee in all things—earth, heaven, sea, and sky.

Spirit all-bountiful! in other ages,
Thou deign'd'st to walk in mortal paradise
With Adam! and with prophets, seers, and sages,
Thy angels, down descending from the skies,
Since then have frequent held sweet intercourse,
Watching and warning, and in cell and prison
Holding with saints and eremites discourse;
Sitting in sepulchers, from whence, uprisen,
Thy Son, ascending, God-like, to the skies,
Unvailed to man the immortal paradise.

Spirit all-mighty! not alone thy angels
With thee have walked along our mortal way,
Breathing in raptured ears Love's high evangels,
Making our night of sin and sorrow, day;
Thou stood'st with Moses on the holy mountain;
Thy angels, Peter, 'prisoned, comforted;
To many an ancient shrine and sacred fountain
The mem'ry of thy presence still is wed;
But more than this, man's spirit thou hast given
To bring us messages of Love from Heaven.
Spirit eternal! was it not thy prophet,
    And not an angel, John in Patmos saw I
So reads the "Sacred Word." Shall doubters scoff it?
    Ay, one who erst, obedient to thy law,
'Mong men walked forth ere called to the Elysian;
    A holy man—a saint—at death upborne
To Heaven, from whence, in glory, to John's vision
    He came, of all his mortal image shorn.
And if one earth-born soul, through death immortal,
Descend, may not another pass Heaven's portal?

Spirit adorable! thy love surpasses
    All thought, all wish, all prayer of feeble man.
In all time's cycles not a moment passes
    But thou dost all thy vast creation scan.
Thou watchest, guidest, givest life and motion
    Temp'ring the pulses of the universe;
Alike In smallest mote, star, tempest, ocean,
    Each voiced thy praise and glory to rehearse;
But most of all, thy love to man is shown,
For in Thine image made is man alone.

O Spirit, who didst bear in chariot, burning,
    The rapt Elijah up from earth to heaven,
While yet with mortal eye and sense discerning
    The glorious convoy to his spirit given;
Who caught up Enoch ere death's hand had stricken
    The cords that bound him to mortality;
Thou canst our mortal to immortal quicken;
    Thou canst from sin and bondage make us free
To Thee, in faith and trust, we look, adoring,
Upon thine altars all our incense pouring.
O Spirit infinite! do thou guide—guard us,
   By thy dear messengers of love and grace;
Thou art our God! forever turn toward us
   The light and glory of thy Father-face;
Speak, by thy spirits, to our souls and through us,
   As thou hast spoken to the saints of old;
In truth and all things beautiful renew us;
   Purge us from dross and make us as fine gold
Unto our spirits be thy Spirit given,
To lead on earth and bear us up to heaven!

C. D. S.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTION</td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INVOCATION</td>
<td>xiii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AMERICAN FREEDOM</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE OUTCAST</td>
<td>90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE REUNION</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE BETRAYED</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE SPIRIT-BORN</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A VISION</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OLD FABLES</td>
<td>181</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE LAST OF THE RED MAN</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PROGRESS OF THE WORLD</td>
<td>190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE CRUCIFIXION</td>
<td>195</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE FUTURE</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE CHANGE</td>
<td>202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THEY'VE LAID HER TO REST</td>
<td>205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DEATH</td>
<td>208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DOGMAS</td>
<td>210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE ROCK OF TRUTH</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE PILOT, REASON</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>POVERTY'S DOOM</td>
<td>220</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A VISION</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THEOLOGY</td>
<td>232</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A FRAGMENT</td>
<td>238</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TRUST IN GOD</td>
<td>244</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE FUTURE</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AWAKE, MY LUTE</td>
<td>248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SHADOWS</td>
<td>260</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WEEP NOT FOR THE DEAD</td>
<td>263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WE ARE FREE</td>
<td>265</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GONE BEFORE</td>
<td>257</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE CHILD'S PRAYER</td>
<td>269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INFANTILE DEVOTIONS</td>
<td>260</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
SPIRIT-VOICES.

———

AMERICAN FREEDOM.

AMERICA, called Freedom's land, well roam,
Leaving awhile our bright, celestial home,
Throughout thy growing cities' crowded streets;
Nor e'er forget thy villages' calm retreats,
Where rugged plowmen till the fruitful lands,
That willing yield unto their toil worn hands
The bread that drives grim famine from your door,
And cheers the hearts of Europe's starving poor.
Across thy favored hills we'll take our way,
From, Eastern shores to calm Pacific's bay;
Where throng the rich, the poor, the young, the old,
In eager search—for what? for paltry gold!
Where busy cities, with a sudden birth,
Shoot up, like fairy castles, from the earth;
Reminding us of tales in childhood learned,
Of forests in a night to cities turned;
Of sinking sun that on a desert glowed,
Then rose again and countless armies showed.
Back turning then, we'll seek thy Southern shore,
Where summers' sun seems smiling evermore;
Where luscious fruits are heaping on the ground,
And plenty's smile is beaming bright around;
Where all seems joy, till, winding through the vale,
Is heard the stifled, heart-despairing wail
Of Afric's sons, who groan beneath the toil
Oppression claims on Freedom's vaunted soil.
Through palace rich, through cottage of the low,
With fleeting spirit-step we'll noiseless go;
Through halls of learning wend our quiet way,
And temples, where the rich can kneel to pray,
Nor fear, beneath the tow'ring dome safe pewed,
To soil their splendors in the contact rude;
And sisters, brothers, bearing humble name,
Attention from us for awhile shall claim;
Till all combined and mingled into one,

From Maine's bleak hills to Texas' southern sun,
From California's gold-besprinkled shore,
To where Atlantic's billows endless roar,
A changeful tale of joy and sorrow tells:
And ye may judge how much of Freedom dwells
Within the land, which, though beyond the rest,
Is still with God-like Liberty unblest.
Commence we where the Pilgrim Fathers stood,
And to their guide across the foaming flood,
With hearts united bowed in humble prayer,
And praise that, with a kind paternal care,
From persecution's hand he'd set them free
Safe guided them across the stormy sea,

To where hope smiling on the Western strand,
Welcomed their coming with extended hand
To where, from shackles free, the mind might soar,
And realms of glorious thought unchecked explore,
Nor fear, that knowledge gained, to freely speak

To minds inquiring truths for which they seek.
But were they free as this? or do I tell
What would have been but for the slavish spell

Dark superstition throws across the mind,
And bigotry's strong chains assist to bind?
Do I but tell what might have been, had they,

Who harbored first in Plymouth's welcome bay,
But finished what they bad so well begun;
Followed the path marked out by Reason's sun,
Wide scattered every fragment of the chain

That would not let them soar above, the plain
O'er which their fathers moved, fearful they'd turn
From ancient paths, progressive truths to learn?
Did they then break the chains that long had bound
Them, willing, abject slaves unto the ground,

And rise above the with'ring, dead'ning spell?
The blood of those who dared to think, can tell
How much the struggling, soaring mind had won,
Who fondly dreamed that Freedom's Western sun
[long poem, rest skipped]
THE REUNION.

BENEATH an oak tree's ancient shade,
Two guileless children laughing played,
Shouting in youthful glee;
As loud their joyful clamor rose,
Who grief and mis'ry, want and woes,
Could in their future see?

One was a boy, of noble form,
Who seemed as master of the storm,
So young, and yet so bold;
And one a girl, so dazzling fair,
She seemed a nymph of upper air,
As down her back her golden hair
In glossy ringlets rolled.

Long years have past since, filled with glee,
Those children skipp'd beneath that tree,
And there, again they stand;
Not now, as then, with careless smile,
For one must leave that happy isle,
For fame and fortune seek awhile
In some far distant land.
He strove in vain to calm her fears—
He would return in two short years,
   And never more would roam;
Return with riches, honor, fame,
Return her waiting hand to claim
   In this his treasured home.
Truth sits upon his noble brow,
Then how can she distrust him now
   In this, their parting hour?
She does not! yet the threatening cloud
That's gathering 'round her, like a cloud,
   Portends a gloomy shower.

Though young, she yet hath sorrow seen,
And thus with her it's ever been
   When some deep grief was near,
And now her first, her only love,
Was bound in foreign climes to rove
Dost wonder that she vainly strove
   To check the falling tear?
Time flies—he must away—farewell!
Like gloomy sound of convent bell,
Tolling a passing spirit's knell,
   That parting word appears!
And why? he'll sure return again—
Then why that heavy, dreary pain?
   Why all those boding fears?
That gath'ring cloud above her hung
And would not pass away,
That dread unto her spirit clung,
Its, sable mantle 'round her flung
   For many a weary day.

Glad news soon came her mind to free
He'd landed safe beyond the sea
   Farewell to all her fears
Ah, no! though all seemed clear and bright
To others, yet to her no light
   Through that dark cloud appears
A letter, and another, came,
Bringing her news of wealth and fame
   For him on distant shore
Still to herself she'd ever say,
Through sleepless night and weary day,
   "I ne'er shall see him more!"
His letters breathed but hope and love
He said for her alone he strove,
   Without her all was gloom;
Yet ever, as these words she read,
They seemed as coming from the dead—
   As echoes from the tomb.

Two years have nearly passed, and now
   He speaks of his return;
That sadness still is on her brow,
   And why—she's yet to learn;
She knows his love for her is pure,
And will throughout all time endure,
    Then why that failing heart?
Now that the wished-for day is near,
When he'll return her way to cheer,
Why does that heavy cloud of fear
    Still threaten them to part?

But now that youth, so true, so brave,
Is dashing o'er the sparkling wave;
Loaded with honor, wealth, and fame,
His love for her is still the same
As when the pale moon heard their vows,
Beneath that oak's wide-spreading boughs;
He's traveled many a land I ween,
And many a form of beauty seen,
But none that could with her compare
No beauty that was half so rare.
Now, musing to himself, he'd say,
    While gazing On the sea,
"Why should that spirit, once so gay,
    So changed, so saddened be?
Her letters all are tinged with gloom,
As if some dark, some dreadful doom,
Some fearful phantom of the tomb
    Was ever by her side;
But soon we'll meet, no more to part,
Then with that faithful, trusting heart,
Adown life's stream I'll glide."
Ay! soon they'll meet to part no more—
But not on Albion's friendly shore.

Above the deep, the foaming tides
Yon gallant ship so nobly rides,
   Oh! who could danger fear?
They've crossed the ocean almost o'er,
And soon old England's rock-bound shore
   Their anxious sight will cheer;
Once more they'll tread familiar lands—
And now they dream that loving hands
   Are greeting them at last;
Alas! their dreams are all in vain,
They ne'er will see those friends again
   Till death's dark stream they've passed!
All free from care, he's sleeping now
The smile of hope is on his brow;
He hears not the low, mournful wail
Of winds, that speak the rising gale—
The white-capp'd waves, the lightning's flash,
The sea-bird's cry, the thunder's crash,
   He does not see nor hear.
But many in that noble ship
Are starting up with quiv'ring lip,
   And cheeks all blanched with fear—
Oh! 'twas a sad, a mournful sight,
Through all the dark, the fearful night,
Upon that wave-washed deck;
Who shall describe the dreadful shock,
As, high upon that hidden rock,
   She drove a helpless wreck?
Loud cries for help and woman's wail
Were heard above the rising gale,
   By those upon the beach;
But all in vain the wish to save—
No boat could live upon the wave,
   That vessel's side to reach.

These cries for help are growing less,
But still that signal of distress
   Sounds high above the storm,
And tells, though breakers 'round them dash,
That shattered bark delays the crash,
   And hearts with hope beat warm;
They hope in vain, for never more
They'll stand upon old England's shore,
   And wander through each vale;
Long, long will loved ones for them mourn,
And watch in vain for their return—
   Their cheeks with sorrow pale!

But, hark! what means that dreadful shriek
   Which rises 'bove the gale?
Could that dread rock, those breakers speak,
   They'd tell a mournful tale—
How with one wild, one sudden dash,
One parting groan, one fearful crash,
That stranded ship went down;
How words of hope and trusting prayer,
Mingled with ravings of despair,
Rose high upon the wailing air,
   Amid the tempest's frown:
That shriek was heard upon the beach,
   Above the ocean's roar,
And ghastly forms they could not reach,
   Came dashing on the shore.

The strength of that fierce gale is past,
And morning's light is breaking fast
   Upon the foaming wave,
Beneath which, all the joyful band
That gazed upon their native land,
   Have found a watery grave;
Oh, no! not all have sunk to rest
Beneath the billow's foaming crest,
   For one is on the shore;
But he is numbered with the dead—
The light from that dark eye has fled—
   Yes, fled forevermore!

Was it for this he left his home,
Through gloomy, savage wilds to roam
   Far, far from every friend?
Of all his youthful dreams of fame,
Of faithful love and honored name,
    Is this to be the end?
Is this pale, lifeless, ghastly form,
The noble man, whose, heart beat warm
    At near approach to home?

Oh, no! he's left that useless clay,
Through glorious worlds of endless day,
    Eternally to roam;
They gather 'round him on the sand,
With sorrowing hearts and friendly hand,
    They close his glazing eye;
With mournful steps and words of gloom,
They bear that stranger to the tomb,
And wonder why this early doom—
    Why one so young should die!
Ah! could they look beyond this earth,
And see that glorious angel-birth,
    They would not question why!

The storm is raging fierce and loud
    'Round the once happy home,
Where sits a form in silence bowed,
    Her brow o'ercast with gloom;
Fiercely the lightnings 'round her flash,
And mingling with the tempests crash,
    Do threat'ning thunders roll;
She heeds them not, though pealing loud,
For now a heavier, darker cloud
   Is resting on her soul;
Too well she knows that sorrow's near,
   As darker grows that cloud
As deep'ning gloom and hopeless fear,
   Fast on her spirit crowd;
For oft before she's felt such gloom,
As o'er loved friends some dreadful doom
   Was gathering to fall;
But ne'er before did cloud so bold
Twine round her heart in fearful fold,
   So like a gloomy pall.

The morning sun now shining bright,
Is bathing in a flood of light
   That quiet, peaceful vale
And but for trees all twisted, torn,
No trace is left this lovely morn
   Of the fierce evening gale;
But for that sad, that weary heart,
Morn's cheerful light can have no part,
   For all is dark despair!
Her last, faint hope forever fled,
As burst that cloud above her head
Ah! better far be with the dead
   Than all her grief to bear!
She wandered forth, in listless mood,
Beneath the shade of a deep wood;
She heeded not that 'cross her path
Huge limbs were strewn, as if in wrath,
   By the fierce tempest's power;
The ruin 'round she minded not,
Until she came unto the spot,
Where oft in childhood's hour she'd played
That sacred place, the oak-tree's shade,
   Where passed their parting hour;
But, ah! how changed was all—how drear,
The place so long by her held dear,
   That heard their youthful vows
The winds had spared that noble oak,
But, shattered by the lightning's stroke,
   Were its wide-spreading boughs.

Leaning against the blasted oak,
That stricken form now feebly spoke
   Her voice with anguish chill;
"That threat'ning, gloomy cloud has fled,
But well I know he's with the dead
   His noble heart is still;
I felt his presence in the storm,
And, though I could not see his form,
   I knew 'twas by my side:
'Tis past—and now, like this brave oak,
My mind is blasted by the stroke,
My weary, weary heart is broke,
My hopes all scattered wide
This lonely bower, all stripp'd and bare,
Is a fit type of the despair
    That's settling on my mind;
Yon oak is shatter'd by the storm,
But still it stands, like this frail form,
    Exposed to each chill wind
Though on it falls reviving rain,
And shines the summer sun, 'tis vain—
    It ne'er again will bloom;
But long a useless trunk will stand,
Like me, a cumberer of the land,
    Fit only for the tomb."

Thus sadly spake this maiden pale,
And wandering lonely through the vale,
    She ever for him wept;
Friends strove to drive away that gloom
But though she bad not beard his doom,
Full well she knew within the tomb,
    In death's embrace he slept
For often now she felt him near,
Her weary steps to guide
And oft as for him fell the tear,
    He seemed her grief to chide;
But still she could not give him up,
And oft she mourned affliction's cup
    Such brimming draught should bear;
With mortal eyes she could not see
The heavenly rest he'd entered, free
   From every earthly care;
She could not see the angel-form
Which sprung to life in that wild storm;
She does not see those spirits bright,
Who gather round him in the light
   Of that celestial day;
That welcome song she does not hear,
Too thrilling sweet for mortal ear;
Those heavenly notes, that glorious light
For earthly eyes is far too bright
   Too bright for feeble clay;
But could she for one moment see
His noble form from sorrow free,
   As, roaming through those spheres,
He turns from viewing beauties rare,
To guard her steps with tender care,
   She'd banish all her fears.

Kind friends are gathering round to cheer,
And, as time flies, they hope to hear
   Some tidings of that crew;
She knew their hopes were all in vain—
That never they would hear again
   Too well the maiden knew!
It was a mournful sight to see
That youthful heart, once light and free,
Fast sink into the grave;
Sad 'twas to see each loving heart,
That in her sorrows shared a part
So vainly strive to save
As day by day her cheek grew pale,
And that wan form told the dread tale
That from them she must go,
They gazed upon her brow with grief,
And strove, in vain, to find relief
From the impending woe.

Often she felt those friends were dear,
And fain would with them stay;
But that loved spirit's ever near
To beckon her away;
He whispers to her weary soul,
That where those blissful waters roll,
She'll find eternal rest
He bids her look beyond this earth,
To glorious scenes of spirit-birth,
Where ever dwell the blest;
She knows that he is ever by,
Though with her feeble, mortal eye,
She can not see his face;
Yet soon she feels that she shall be
With his blest spirit roaming free,
Then gazing, as beneath that tree,
New beauties she will trace.
No wonder, then, devouring death
   For her had lost its sting;
That thoughts of her expiring breath,
   Should naught but pleasure bring;
Nor that she looked with rapturous joy
   To the bright angel-home,
Where death could ne'er her hopes destroy—
   Where sorrow ne'er could come;
For she had known scarce else but grief,
And feeling soon she'd find relief
   From all her sorrows part—
Revived the hope within her breast,
Not for a fleeting, earthly rest,
   But with that faithful heart;
For earthly rest she knew was vain—
With every pleasure mingled pain,
   Its thorny paths she'd tried
But with those spirits roaming free,
She knew earth's sorrows all would flee;
How could she else than happy be,
   When by that loved one's side?

As faded fast her form away,
And nearer, nearer drew the day,
   When with his spirit bright
She'd meet in yon celestial place,
They gazed upon her lovely face,
And in those features plainly traced
The spirits' beaming light;
Then wonder'd why that settled gloom
The fearful impress of the tomb,
    Which stamped her youthful face
Io those calm smiles, serene and bright,
Peaceful as autumn's fading light,
    So soon should give its place!
She's greatly changed—and yet 'tis not
That she the lost one has forgot
    He's ever in her thought;
But that with him she soon will be
That soon his noble face she'll see
    This happy change has wrought;
And should she for one moment feel,
Death did not o'er her senses steal
    With sure though cautious tread,
Deep grief would rest on that frail form,
Again would rage the fearful storm
    'Round her devoted head.

Her mind is fixed, not on the earth,
But on those spheres where love has birth;
She's through with fleeting, transient toys,
Fast pressing on to nobler joys
Joys to which angel minds aspire
Where souls are warmed by wisdom's fire,
And ever mounting higher, higher,
    By reason's hand are led.
THE REUNION. 145

Now autumn, winds, with mournful sound
    Are sweeping through the vale,
And forest leaves are scattered round,
    Like chaff before the gale;
How sadly changed is Nature's face,
To those who only there can trace
    The emblems of decay;
They see not, in the parent earth,
Those germs that, patient, wait their birth,
    Till spring's reviving day;
But to those minds that farther look,
That deeper read in Nature's book,
    Those trees so leafless, bare,
Their garments worn have thrown aside,
To be replaced by robes of pride,
    Through Nature's kindly care;
Thus was it with that lovely form,
As on her couch she lay;
She heeded not the wailing storm—
    Her thought, were far away;
She knows that soon from earth she'll go,
And leave that feeble form below
    To mingle with the dust;
She knows her spirit soon will wear
A garment free from very care
    Unwav'ring is her trust;
Fox now her griefs are nearly o'er,
She's almost reached the blessed shore
Where dwells the loved and lost;
Her little bark has faced the gale—
Soon, soon she'll furl its peaceful sail,
And wander through that heavenly vale,
   No longer tempest tossed.

Dear friends are gath'ring 'round her now
With bleeding heart and saddened brow
   Each takes a long farewell;
As the last, parting word they speak,
And gaze their last on that wan cheek,
   Their anguish who can tell?
For she was dear to every heart,
And now that with her they must part
   Must yield her to the tomb
They feel that when her voice is stilled
In death, her place earl ne'er be filled,
   No light can cheer the gloom.

Grim death is stealing o'er her fast,
But on her brow, until the last
   Is hovering that smile;
For loving spirits gather near,
And while they banish every fear,
   The dreary way beguile;
But while they wait, those shining bands,
Her soul to greet with welcome hands,
   She turns to those that weep,
THE REUNION.

And bids them cast aside their fears,
For loved ones from the spirit-spheres
    Their vigils 'round her keep;
Then to the form that's bending low
Above her couch, with looks of woe,
    She whispers, "Mother, dear!
My moments now with you are brief—
But gaze not thus with looks of grief,
This weary soul will find relief—
    Then dry those falling tears;
Long hast thou seen my inmost heart,
And known on earth I've had no part—
    That all was one drear waste;
Ah! could you see these spirits near,
Their welcome songs could you but hear,
Soon, soon you'd cheek the gushing tear,
    And bid my spirit haste—
Haste! haste my grief-worn, weary soul,
For thou hast nearly reached the goal—
    No longer here delay!
Spread thy glad wings and leave the form,
And in this dark, this lowering storm,
    My soul no longer stay!
Hark! now I hear glad spirit-songs—
Ah! could they but their notes prolong
    To reach thy list'ning ears—
Could that sweet music fill this room,
'Twould quick the gath'ring gloom disperse
And wing your thoughts with seraph verse
    To your celestial spheres
Where soon, from this frail body free,
Away from earthly cares I'll flee,
    And find a rest at last;
Then grieve no more that I must go
Where love's eternal waters flow,
Where love's unfading blossoms grow,
Where never more can earthly woe
    Its shadows o'er me cast.
You're slowly fading from my sight
And now a soft, a heavenly light
    Is stealing through the room;
Swallowed, as 'twere, in that bright cloud
Your forms—but spirits 'round me crowd,
    Though not with looks of gloom;
They come, those loved ones mourned as dead,
They press around my dying bed,
    And wait my parting breath
Dark clouds no longer dim my sight,
And 'round me now beams Heaven's own light;
    My soul, can this be death?
Ah, yes! I feel I'm almost there!
A few brief moments more of care
    And with this earth I've done!
One struggle with this useless clay
And my freed soul will soar away,
    The victory will be won!
Farewell, dear friends! farewell to all,
I must away! bright spirits call,
And gladly I obey;
Dry, dry those tears—no longer weep,
For though this spirit now must sleep,
"Twill wake to perfect day."

Thus passed this lovely maid away,
And, while the sun's descending ray
Still lingered in the room,
The flower that graced this earth awhile
Was taken from its native Isle,
In Paradise to bloom.

She wakes—and hark! what heavenly sound
Is that? why does her heart rebound
So light, so free from pain?
She's still within that dying room—
Why has it lost its look of gloom?
Has health returned again?
Bright spirit-forms she now can see,
And asks, "What means this mystery?"
They point her to that bed!
She sees her form in death's cold sleep,
With loving friends that o'er it weep,
And mourn her with the dead;
She turns unto those spirits now
She looks—she sees that noble brow,
That never-absent form come!
"I come!" she cried, and sprung
Unto his side—then 'round him flung
Her arms, and felt, as there she clung,
Secure from every storm.

Oh! who can tell the rapturous joy,
The love, the bliss without alloy,
Of her fond, trusting heart?
They've passed through trouble, toil, and strife,
And met in realms of endless life,
Where sorrow has no part.
"And have I passed the dreary shade,
In heavenly garments, bright, arrayed
Or do I yet but dream?"
Is this bright form to which I cling,
But the weak brain's imagining
Or he it truly seems?"
He speaks, he bids her now rejoice;
And as she hears that spirit-voice,
Her doubts aside are cast;
For now she knows her trials o'er,
Unto Ωâ that welcome, blissful shore
Across death's stream she's passed.

"Welcome!" that noble spirit cried;
"Welcome once more unto my side
Where thou shalt ever stay!
Together will we roam these spheres,
Through an eternity of years,
With naught to bar the way
Long have I watched thy footsteps drear,
Long strove the dismal way to cheer,
But now, that duty o'er,
Each will assist the upward way,
And in the light of endless day
We'll countless realms explore."
She looks once more upon the clay
That's now fast hast'ning to decay
They've dressed it for the tomb—
But little reek the friends that weep,
And o'er it lonely vigils keep,
She's still within the room—
Ah! for one moment could that light,
So pure, so heavenly, pierce their sight,
'Twould chase away the gloom!
Now, turning from that scene of woe,
She listens to the music low,
Which seems advancing near;
Higher and higher swells the song,
As nearer draws that angel throng
Till she this lay can hear

"Sister, come, welcome home—
Free from grief and care;
Find a rest with the blest,
   In their pleasures share.

Spirits bright, with delight
   Meet thee on the shore;
Welcome hands, from these bands,
   Greet thee evermore.

In these spheres, bitter tears
   Are no longer shed;
Earth's dark storm, with yon form,
   Has forever fled.

One that's dear, now is near
   To instruct the way;
With him press on to bliss,
   Here no longer stay;

By his side thou hast tried
   What was earthly joy;
But thou'rt free now to see
   Bliss without alloy.

Sister, on; thou hast won
   Victory at last;
Then advance, not a glance
   Backward ever cast."
Many a well-remembered face
Amid the throng she now can trace,
    As fast as they gather near;
And many from that happy band
Are pressing on with friendly hand
    And welcome words of cheer.
Could those fond hearts, by grief oppressed
As on her form they gaze their last,
    But turn their weeping eyes
Where spirits loved, on that blessed shore
Are greeting her, oh! never more
    Would murmuring doubts arise;
But now that lifeless, soulless clay
Within its narrow tomb they lay,
    And turn them to their home
One long-loved form was missing there,
And all seemed desolate and bare
    As light would never come;
But she they sadly mourn as dead,
By that fond, loving spirit led,
    Now roams the seraph sphere,
And listens, with enraptured soul,
To blissful songs that 'round her roll,
    And greet her gladdened ear;
Supported now by friendly hands,
Guarded by loving angel bands,
    She mounts the azure skies;
She leaves the earth far, far behind,
And swifter than the viewless wind,
     On seraph pinions flies;
Higher and higher still she mounts,
And deeper drinks from heavenly founts
     While gazing on those scenes,
'Till rapt and swallowed up in love
And bliss unspeakable, above
     Her wildest, fondest dreams;
But, while she soars on angel wings,
And blissful draughts from heavenly springs
     O'erpower her soul with light,
She'll ne'er forget the earthly home,
Where in youth's summer hour she roamed,
But strive to cheer the deep'ning gloom—
     Dispel the settled night.
She hovers 'round the friends she's left,
Brings' comfort to the hearts bereft,
     And lights the dreary way;
She cheers the struggling, fainting mind
That lingers in despair behind,
     O'erburdened with the clay.

Thus, when her race on earth was run,
Her life of usefulness begun,
     Who would not hail the hour
When called to leave the weary form
To leave earth's cares, its gloomy storm,
     For heaven's peaceful bower?
What on this earth was there to bind
That pure, that heaven-exalted mind,
   Or check her upward way?
She was indeed a child of grief,
Nor could her spirit find relief
   Confined within the clay;
Until death came, with friendly hand,
And freed her from the hateful band
   That held her to the earth
She little else than sorrow knew,
But soon her happy spirit flew
   Where love and joy have birth;
Encircling now that heavenly height,
Upon the blissful, glorious sight
   Those wond'ring spirits gaze;
That youth so brave, that maid so fair,
Are filling now the fragrant air
With words of trusting, thankful prayer,
   And notes of endless praise.
THE BETRAYED

SADLY sighs the wailing breeze
To the startled, rustling trees
Whispering its mournful tale
To the wild-flowers of the vale
Sobbing to the rippled stream,
Till its ever-shifting gleam
Vanishes, as 'neath a cloud—
Till the gentle wild-flower, bowed
To the earth, in silence weeps;
While the tender vine that creeps,
Joining tendrils with the leaves
Of the forest monarch, grieves
That the wind such saddened tale
Truthful whispers through the vale.

Thus the, wind its story told—
Sweeping playful through the wold,
Sporting now with withered leaf,
Now with imitative grief—
Shrieking through the gnarled root,
At the aged oak-tree's foot;
Darting now o'er sunny glade,
Kissing cheek of willing maid,
Seeking then the merry rill,
Leaping down the shaded hill,
Bathing in its darkest pool
Over-heated breath to cool.

In a gloomy, caverned glen,
Where man's foot had hardly been,
Paused I for a moment, where,
With a look of fixed despair,
By a limpid spring reclined,
Wildly talking to the wind,
Fairest maid of earthly mold;
'Pale her cheek, and deathly cold
Was each water-dripping hand,
With which she the pebbled sand,
From that ever-bubbling spring
Hastened by her side to bring.
Then she'd spread each raven lock
On the mossy cushioned rock,
Laughing, as each tangled tress
She entwined with water-cress,
Dripping from that lonely brook;
Then with wild, inquiring look
Down the tangled glen she'd gaze,
While her feeble voice she'd raise
To a wild, unearthly strain,
Half of pleasure, half of pain
Now a Joyous, happy note
Issued from her trembling throat,
Changing to a fiercer sound,
Waking dismal echoes 'round,
Sinking to such plaintive trill
That the merry, whirling rill
Lingered in a shady nook,
Wond'ring, till it saw the look
That despair will ever trace,
Unmistaken, on her face;
Kissing kindly, then, the hand
Which she buried 'neath its sand,
Sadly silent on it swept,
And the maiden's sorrows wept;
Wept, while it this changing lay
Heard upon its bounding way.

"'Neath a wild-wood's cooling shade,
Where our happy vows were made,
    Wander I so cheerily;
In the over-arching trees,
Joining with the whisp'ring breeze,
    Birds are singing merrily;

Yet he lingers, lingers still,
While adown the distant hill
    Creep the shadows steadily;
Once I could not breathe his name,
But my own, returning, came
   From his lips so readily;

Downward creeps the cruel shade,
Stretches o'er the open glade,
   Creeping, oh! so drearily;
Still I, watching, wait to greet,
Listen for his ling'ring feet,
   Lonely listen wearily.

Still he comes not; is it so—
Must I disappointed go,
   Roaming, roaming wearily?
Has he then forgot the vow—
Whispered as it seems but now,
   While the birds sang cheerily?

Peace, my struggling heart, be still;
   Peace, each throbbing vein;
Wait; the shadows on the hill
   Bid you wait again:
Wait; thy weary watching's done—
   Ended with the sinking sun.

Said he not he'd meet me here,
   Ere the shadows fell?
But 'twas in the fading year
When he bid farewell;
Weary weeks have passed since then—
Will he never come again?

They have cursed me for my shame
   Since we parted last,
And upon my wretched name
   Shadows have been cast;
Even now they dark'ning fall
O'er my heart like, gloomy pall.

Only curses greet my ear
   When I seek my home,
Look of scorn for pity's tear
   Friendless thus I roam;
Peace, my whirling brain, be still,
Night is creeping down the hill.

Night is creeping, while I, weeping,
   List his step in vain;
Fancies frightful, then delightful,
   Dart across my brain;
Oh, my weary, weary head,
Would 'twas resting with the dead

Singing thus, the drooping maid
Gathered up each dripping braid,
While her tears kept mournful time
To the crush'd heart's wailing rhyme
Then she changed that song of grief—
In her hair twined faded wreath,
Laughed to see the gloomy shade
Stealing o'er the forest glade;;
Down the glen gave parting look,
Whisper'd to the list'ning brook,
Bidding it a sad good-night,
Promising, when morning light
Took its first, its early rest
On the tiny billow's breast,
,She would haste that light to greet
Haste the absent one to meet;
Ling'ring then, she left the place,
And with feeble, trembling pace,
Refuge from the night-mist chill,
Rolling down the darkening hill,
Sought beneath some roof to find
Silent, following behind,
Heard I curses, deep and loud,
Greet her soul with sorrow bowed;
Saw I then the Christian spurn
To the night air, helpless, turn
With reproach her tender frame
Then unto her, softly, came,
As she faint, despairing stood,
From the borders of the wood,
Music sweet of dancing wave,
From a stream whose ripples lave
Many a drooping forest leaf;
First, they seemed like wail of grief,
Echoes of her own soft cry
Then they floated gently by
With a soothing, magic strain,
Whispering to her grief-crazed brain
That her troubled, aching breast
Might in their embrace find rest.

Then I saw the sudden start,
As, within her wretched heart,
Strongest principle of life
With that siren song bad strife.
To the first inclining fast
Was she, when a Christian passed;
Scornful scanned her hollow face,
Then increased his pious, pace,
Sneering words upon his tongue
Then the dark waves louder sung
That, beneath their sparkling tide,
From that look of holy pride
Giving to her bleeding heart
Keener pain than venomed dart
She might sleep, nor heartless jeer,
Mocking laugh, or curses hear;
Yielding to that magic spell,
Sought she then the forest dell
Still I followed on the bank,
Water-flowers and rushes rank
Bowed their heads beneath her feet
A decaying trunk her seat
Made she, till each braided tress,
Loosened, did its mate caress
Singing mournfully the while,
With a saddened, wand'ring smile
Gazed she on each flowing lock;
Lightly scaled a frowning rock
'Round which waters wildly swept;
Changing then her mood, she wept;
And each droop'd, mist-dripping leaf
Joined the maiden's lonely grief,
While the never-ceasing spray,
Trickling down its channeled way,
From the mossy granite fell
With fresh speed, as pity's spell
Softened e'en its hardened bed,
Till it mournful tear-drops shed.

'Cross her fevered brow I swept,
And, as scalding tears she wept,
Brushed them from each drooping lid,
Whispered her that death was hid
'Neath the silver-crested wave;
But in vain I strove to save
From that doom the, maiden fair;
Words of mine, like idle air,
Pass'd her ears unheeded by;
With one wild, despairing cry
From the spray-wet cliff she sprung,
While the dark waves upward flung—
To the maiden's coming greet—
Their chill arms her form to meet
Then I saw them madly whirl
Onward with the struggling girl
Saw one fierce convulsive grasp,
Heard one smothered, gurgling gasp
Followed by a feeble mean,
Then was with the wave, alone.

Hushed the tale, and onward sped,
As the scene renewed it fled,
The sad wind; while trailing vine,
Lily pale and eglantine,
Joined each trembling moistened leaf
In a mingled wail of grief
At the maiden's mournful fate
Wond'ring why each friendly gat,
'Gainst the one who bore the sin
Should be closed, while safe within,
Welcomed was the tempter vile
Wond'ring thus, they drooped awhile,
Till with evening dews there came
Echoes of the lost one's name
Sounding not in saddened wail
Shrieking not in morning gale;
Stealing 'stead in gentle sigh,
Such as breathes when Autumn's sky
With unruffled beauty glows
Such as fans the opening rose,
'Neath the pure, unclouded moon
Or, at sultry hour of noon
Breathes upon the lily's leaf,
Till its seeming weight of grief
Is forgotten, and it rears,
Dripping still with pearly tears,
Its pale cheek of purest white,
Thankful, to the offered light.
Gently thus her name was heard,
And, as by some magic word,
Was each rising murmur stilled;
And a joyous feeling thrilled
Through each drooping leaf and flower
Of that ancient forest bower;
For they knew that she was there,
Silent moving through the air.

Changed they then their sobs of woe
To the breeze, that sadly slow
Whispered them *the mournful tale,
As again it swept the vale,
Quickly told the tidings glad
Then it changed its sighings sad,
Paused to sweep the ling'ring tears
Remnants left of passing fears—
From o'erburdened stalk and limb,
Joined a while the thankful hymn
Raised by them, that earthly wrong
Could alone to earth belong
That, in the creative mind
Justice perfect she could find
Justice, free from base alloy;
Justice, that would not destroy,
But assist her wretched mind
Rest by men denied, to find.
Left it then the smiling bower,
Whispered to each weeping flower
That the morning's saddened tale
Bowed, in sorrow, through the vale,
Of the rest that she had found
Then arose a joyful sound
From each forest, hill, and dale,
That had joined the morning's wail.
THE SPIRIT-BORN

SILENCE, unbroken silence, reigns where late
The ringing laugh and sportive jest were heard,
Telling of hearts, as then, unclouded by
The cares of rudimental life; the rich,
Exotic plants, whose perfume loads the air,
Till it would seem that Persia's boasted breeze
Its rarest gifts had brought, now droop as if
In grief; pictures, gazing upon us from
Their draped, half-hidden frames, seem weeping 'neath
Their painted smiles; and in its gloomy folds
Of black, severe the cold, unfeeling glass Reflects but sorrow.

Why is this? why should
Those beaming smiles be changed to bitter tears?
Why should these rooms that late re-echoed songs
Of joy, now silent as the grave appear
Like some vast charnel-house, prepared for the Reception of the crushed and withered hopes
Accumulated through long years of joy?
All nature smiles without; the air is filled
With gladsome sounds; even the rattling cart
Seems striving in its rough, unpolished way
To time with "feathered songster, of the grove,"
Whose little throats are warbling notes of praise,
Till prisoned mates, finding resistance to
The gilded wires in vain, join in the song,
Though with a somewhat saddened trill; but here
Those sounds are muffled, and the reviving
Still, whose welcome beams call forth these grateful Songs, seeks vainly for an entrance through the Drooping folds, that fain would banish every Ray of light from these deserted rooms; or
If, perchance, a struggling ray finds entrance
Through some careless opening, it dimly falls,
Tinged of a somber hue, upon the black
Draped walls, and, by the contrast, to the scene
Adds deeper gloom.

" Dead! dead! my child! my child!
And hast thou gone forever from my sight?
The light that glanced from out those beaming eyes,
Now glazed in death, forever banished hence?
Those little hands, so still, so icy cold,
That ever could with their caresses cheer
My loneliest hours, forever stilled? oh, no
It can not be! she does but sleep! I sure
Again shall hear that darling voice—shall feel Those loved caresses—the music of those Feet are not—they can not be—hushed to a
Never-ending silence; we can not part!
My child! my child! awake, and leave me not Alone it this cold world. Alas! no voice
Responds to mine—that stiffened tongue is mute
The seal of death upon those precious lips
Is placed; the music of that angel-voice
Is hushed, and I am desolate. She's gone
They tell me to a happy home—but where?
Her form is still before my eyes; the curls
Through which her smiles but yesterday burst forth,
Like April sun from golden-tinted clouds,
Are clustering to day upon
This marble brow—these lips are hers, and e'en
The smile—they ever wore when in her happy
Tranquil mood—is resting on them; all, all
Are hers but this dread silence; this belongs
To death, and dooms her to the cold, damp grave.
The grave? oh, no! I can not lay this head,
Which hath so often pillowed on my breast,
Within that dark abode, for winter storms
To rage above, with no kind hand to wipe
The gath'ring mould from this cold cheek—oh, no!
I can not leave her there. If I could feel
That what I love no longer dwells within
This darling form, then I, perchance, might part
From it with less of grief; might yield it to
Its gloomy bed without this severing
Of soul. But thus we can not part. Oh, death!
Whose envious dart hath stilled that bounding pulse,
Release her from these icy bonds till she
This awful mystery can declare. 'Tis vain!
    My prayers return unanswered, and I Weep,
      Alone. My child! my child!—would I had died
For thee, my child!"

Thus, bending o'er the cold
Remains of her whose merry laugh so late
Re-echoed through these gorgeous rooms, with crushed,
Despairing heart, the mother sobbed her grief;
The precious bud that sprang from widowed stalk,
As if its lonely way to cheer, was nipp'd
By envious, death-biting frost, and drooped,
And died, ere yet its perfumed beauties scarce
Had opened to the wooing breeze, leaving
The parent stalk all desolate. What then
On earth could cheer the mother's heart? the light
Had fled that blessed her lonely hearth, she knew
Not where; 'tis true the man of God had told
Her to a happy clime; but then he placed
A gulf impassable between the hearts
That lived but in each other's presence once,
And deemed it grief to separate e'en for An hour; with such a gulf between, could she
Be happy? Judging by her own stricken
Heart, the mother's doubts would rise until she,
In her wand'ring agony, upbraided
Death for the forced separation, which left
Of hope not e'en a flitting ray to cheer
The darkening future.
But, hark! too sweetly
Soft to come from mortal lips, slow music
Steals in wavy trills throughout that darkened
Room; perhaps too pure for mortal ears to Catch the strains which float above that darling
Head, and seem connected, as it were, by
Some mysterious link to that fixed cherub
Smile, which lingers on those icy lips so
Pure, so colorless, that one would deem them
Freshly chiseled by some master hand from pure
Unsullied marble, but for that smile—which Mortal hand, howe'er so high it ranked in Art, would fail to even imitate; fresh
Bursts of music fill the darkened air, till
All this dreary room alive with angel
Voices seems; but still the mourner hears them
Not; she only thinks of her she loved as Dead, or, at the least, within some far-off,
Dreamy place, with but a chance that they would Meet again forever. Oh, what a hope
For stricken heart like hers—how desolate
It seemed! could she but leave that hope, so gross,
Material, and worthless, for the truth
Nature would teach; would she but turn within
Her eyes, so dim with tears; forget awhile
The outward world and list the teachings of
Her own unbiased soul, quick would those gloomy
Doubts give place to brighter hopes; no longer
Would she in death a hideous monster see,
Created for the curse of man, but hail
It as a messenger from Heaven sent,
To clothe with never-fading robes of joy
And immortality the waiting soul;
The room, whose threshold it had crossed, she would
In gloomy folds of black no longer drape;
But view it as the place, not where her child
Had died, but where its little spirit, ere Yet 'twas stained by long abiding with the Flesh, had laid aside the shell which held it
To the gross, material earth, unwilling Prisoner, e'en in its infancy; she Would not roam the distant fields of space, in Mournful search for that mysterious home where Man, in simple ignorance, had told her
Dwelt her absent child, to turn disheartened
From the search—as now she did—again to Gaze with agony renewed upon the Past decaying form; to mark the fearful
Ravages of death, and in despair feel
Stealing through her half-crazed brain the dreadful
Thought—"this is the end of life;" within the Grave our hopes, our fears, our joys, our sorrows
All are hushed. Oh, no! she'd not extend her Search to distant regions, nor would it be Thus fruitless; a gentle voice, soft as the Whisperings of love, would murmur to her
Yearning soul—" Mother, thy side I have not Left; 'tis true I've laid aside the worthless
Robe, which late I wore, but, clothed in garments
Of heavenly texture, now I hover near
Thy heart, to ease it of its load of grief
Above those cold remains no longer weep;
With me they've naught to do; like garments soiled
And rent, aside they're cast, something to be Forgotten:" thus would her sobs be stilled and She, perchance, in calmer mood might hear some Ling'ring strain of the seraphic song sung
Now, e'en here, within this dreary room, by Smiling spirit-forms, her angel-child to Welcome, and in the pauses of those notes
Hold converse sweet with the invisible
But ever-present form of her that now
She mourns as dead.

Thus might it be with all
Who agonize—refusing comfort o'er
The husk, the outward covering of friends,
Ere dread decay forever forces them
Apart—would they but in their strength arise
And soar above the narrow dome 'neath which
They vainly seek for light; would they but range,
Freed from their superstitious chains, the fields
Of nature, from her pages study, and
Seek the truth, not from the lips of others,
But in the never-failing streams which have
Their rise deep in the inner caverns of
The soul, their head the germ divine planted,
By God, in every human breast, their mouth
The boundless universe.
WHO is he, yon hill ascending,
    Followed by the railing crowd?
Low beneath a burden bending
    To the earth his form is bowed;
Soldiers keeping guard around him
    Join the rabble in their cry
See! in mockery they've crowned him
    'Tis some felon doomed to die.

Why are bitter tear-drops falling
    From that sinking felon's eyes,
While with sneers his name they're calling,
    White around him curses rise!
Now with brutal rage they strike him,
    To increase his wearied pace,
While the ruffian crowd, to spite him,
    Spit upon his gentle face

Gentle still, through bruised and weary,
    Though no friendly voice he hears,
Though, through all the way so dreary
    Naught but railing greets his ears.
Sure he's some dread sin committed,
    That they thus assail him loud;
Not a voice that speaks him pitied
    Sounds from out the raging crowd.
Now he turns, with looks of pity
   Halting on his upward way
Gazes on that noble city,
   Silent, bows himself to pray;
Heavenly Father, oh, forgive them,
   Lay not this unto their charge;
Though in darkness I must leave them,
   Father, now their hearts enlarge."

While the shameful tree they're raising
   On that threat'ning, angry throng
He with look of love is gazing—
   Can such look to crime belong?
Why is he this death deserving,
   He whose inmost soul is love?
Never from his duty swerving,
   Gentle, harmless as a dove.

If to cheer the broken-hearted
   And to heal the sick is guilt;
If 'tis sin to clothe the naked,
   Truly let his blood be spilt;
For these crimes he's oft committed,
   Often cheered the fainting mind
Grief and misery ever pitied,
   Comfort ever left behind.

For his death the wretches clamor
   'Till they nail him to the tree;
While they wield the torturing hammer,
   Gloat upon his agony;
" It is finished! oh, forgive them
   That pure, gentle spirit cried;
" Father, of this sin relieve them—"
   Praying thus, the victim died.
Yes, 'twas finished! they had vented
    All their wrath upon his head;
He their scoffs had not resented
    Patient, uncomplaining, bled!
Now the rabble throng dispersing
    Seek the city's crowded marts;
Silence takes the place of cursing,
    Guilt is resting on their hearts.

For that meek, that loving spirit
    They have hunted to the death;
Of their passions made a merit,
    Cursed him till his latest breath;
He their curses met with blessing,
    For us, an example bright
Not his wrongs with wrong redressing
    What will conquer darkness?—light.
THE FUTURE

WHILE beneath the shade reclining
   Of these blissful, happy bowers,
Hope around my heart is twining
   Sweet impress of future hours.

Mingling with that joyous feeling
   Softly creeping o'er my mind,
Visions of the future, stealing,
   Come like gentle summer's wind.
Now the vision grows still brighter—
   Present things have left my sight
All around seems freer, lighter,
   Not a shade of gloomy night.

From whence come those notes of gladness
   That now break upon my ear?
Not from hearts oppressed with sadness,
   Nor from slaves to doubt and fear;

Notes like those can ne'er be sounded
   By oppressed and bleeding souls;
No! they spring from love unbounded—
   Not by form or creeds controlled!

From the earth those notes ascending,
   Which has thus in love progressed
Praise commencing never ending,
   Speaks that man's no more oppressed
Despots triumph there no longer,
   O'er a cringing, servile race;
Thanks to reason, they are stronger,
    Taking each his proper place.

War's no longer desolating,
   Laying waste a fruitful land,
Sin and evil fast abating—
    As before a magic wand.

Brother no more looks on brother
   With a watchful, jealous fear
Striving each to help the other,
    Side by side they now appear.

Oh, how lovely! oh, how glorious!
   When men thus with men unite,
Over party, sect, victorious,
    Pressing forward in their might!

The vision's passing from my sight,
   Fading into viewless air
But leaving on my soul its light
    Firmly fixed and settled there.

Well I know the glorious dawning
   On the earth has now begun
See the first faint beams of morning
    Darting forth from reason's sun.

Now, the rays hut gild the mountains
   With a faint and feeble light;;
But descending, like those fountains
    Downward from their mountain height,
Soon shall spread throughout the valley,
    Bringing light and peace to all;
While the hosts of heav'n shall rally—
    Rally at man's urgent call.

Then the bright millennial year,
    Christians long have watched in vain,
In all its glory will appear—
    Pleasure then succeed to pain.

Forward, then! look backward never
    From the work to which thou'rt called,
Till the earth is free forever,
    Never more by sin enthralled.
THE CHANGE

WILDLY On life's troubled ocean
With an ever-changing motion,
Ever tossed by darkest wave,
From the cradle to the grave
    On the tide
    Did I ride,
Fearful fancies by my side,

Like a meteor's transient gleaming
O'er some lonely wand'rer streaming
Darting with a lurid glare
Through the silent midnight air,
    Was the light,
    Fleeting, bright,
That illum'd my earthly sight.

Like the Ignis Fatuus dancing,
Ever beck'ning, still advancing,
Till the traveler, beguiled,
Lost within the forest wild
    In despair
    Grasps the air,
Was to me that treach'rous glare.

Like the storm-cloud on the mountain,
Then the dark, resistless fountain
Gath'ring in my lonely heart,
From its turbid spring would start
    Onward roll,
    Till my soul
Yielded to its mad control
Nor would for a moment tarry,
But before its wild waves carry
All that strove to check its way,
All that would its progress stay,
   Till Lenore,
   On this shore
Lulls its waves for evermore;

Stills its course—with taper finger
Motions, and the mad waves linger,
Then, retiring, lakelets form,
Sheltered from each bitter storm,
   Where glides love,
   Timid dove,
Guarded by that smile above.

Happy change, front grief to gladness,
Calmest smiles for fearful
Where a raging torrent's roar
Echoed on its craggy shore,
   Flows a stream,
   From whose gleam
Is reflected love's pure beam.
THEY'VE LAID HER TO REST

THEY'VE laid her to rest where the cypress waves
   Its dark boughs over her head
While willows that droop o'er the scattered graves,
   And mourn for the early dead,
Sigh low to the air, with a saddened sound,
And sweep, in their sorrow, the freshened ground.

"We, give dust unto dust," the words were said,
   Quick followed by falling ground;
And they left the place with a hurried tread,
   For sad was the muffled sound—
While weeping they thought of the youthful face
And form they had left in that dreary place.

They wept as they entered the empty room
   Where last they gazed on her brow,
For the flowers she loved, though still in their bloom,
   Seemed sad and desolate now;
The eye was glazed that had watched them unfold,
The hand that nourished was stiffened and cold.

They wandered those chambers wretched and sad,
   The light that cheered them Lid fled;
Hushed was the laugh once so ringing and glad,
   Drear silence reigned in its stead
And their hearts with murmurings bitter rebel
That death's cold hand on their darling had fell.
Oh, could they have seen, as 'round her they pressed
   And wept at each gasping breath,
The spirits of loved ones gone to their rest,
   Who waited approach of death
To greet her, in loving, seraph-embrace,
They could not have gazed with grief on that face.

Could they have heard, as they stood 'round her grave,
   The sounds that greeted her ear,
The cypress' dark shade, the willow's slow wave
   Would not have whispered of fear,
But told of mansions enduring, above,
Where, ever, is heard sweet music of love.

They would not have left with such hurried tread
   The place where her form was laid;
Nor wept as the soil above her cold head
   Was thrown by the sexton's spade
If they could have seen that bright spirit wave
Its joyful, freed pinions o'er the chill grave.

Nor would they feel, as they enter that room,
   That till was blasted and drear;
Could they but pierce superstition's dark gloom
   And know their darling was near,
Their hearts would bound with thanksgiving and praise
That God, in his love, had shortened her days.
Death

OH, Death! so long abused—so long declared
The enemy of man! from us receive,
Who have thy power felt, thy just desert!
We met thee once with dread, and shrank, as on Each pallid brow thy chilling hand was laid
We trembled as thy near approach we felt,
And deemed thee monster hideous, whose greedy
Jaws would shut us from the present world, and,
To some uncertain state our shrinking souls
Consign; with fear we felt thy chill embrace,
And struggled to release us from thy grasp;
But found our struggles vain and yielded, how Unwillingly, our panting souls unto
Thy power resistless; but when, resistance
O'er, we sank into thy arms, what joy was Ours to find our fears imaginary dreams;
To find thee, not as pictured on our minds,
The imagery of curse divine upon
Our early parents sent—by them entailed
To us as punishment that we were born
Of them—to find thee, not an endless wall
Of separation made between the hearts
That earthly life had mingled, as it were,
In one; not the destroyer of our earth
Formed hopes, but the change, the happy change through Which those hopes, these aspirations, all were Purified and made inhabitants, more
Fit for their celestial habitations.
What joy wits ours to find the grasp, which, spite
Our struggles, held us firm, not the fierce grip
Of some revengeful monster sent to force
Us from the cherished friends that stood around;
But friendly hand of angel-messenger,
Front love divine, to lead tis, sent, from the Decaying tenement of flesh, to climes
Where joy progressive ever more should be
Our portion heavenly!

A messenger
Of love unto our weary souls thou wert
Indeed; and when by thee the blissful scenes
Of paradise were opened to our view,
Humiliating shame was mingled with
Our 'wakening joys that we, in ignorance,
Had ever of thee thought as curse on man
For early disobedience sent; and glad,
From that time hailed thee Heaven's choicest gift
To mortal man.
DOGMAS

Weep not as you gaze on the features
That soon must be hid from your sight.
Nor think that the least of God's creatures
Is doomed to an eternal night.
Away with such blasphemous thought!
By lessons of Jesus be taught.

Thinkest thou that thy God would destroy
The work which he once pronounced good?
Would it not his pure glory alloy,
That ages unnumbered has stood,
A mark to the uprising soul
In race to perfection the goal?

Thinkest thou that anger a dwelling
Can find in that deific breast?
That feelings revengeful are welling
Where purity only should rest?
Oh, shame! to the unthinking mind
That such foolish dogmas can bind!

Oh, woe to the sheep of the shepherd
Who wanders so far from the way;
Sooner changed are spots of the leopard
Than the spirit that falleth a prey
Refusing each glimmer of light—
To such worse than the darkness of night.
Why turn to those pages so dusty
   To prop up the wavering creeds
Those volumes so blotted and musty
   The reasoning minds never needs
Though coming from Spirit divine,
Disfigured is many a line.

But stand firm the whole truth to receive
   That reason and nature will teach,
Until you're constrained to believe
   Divinity dwelleth in each;
Nor yield a blind credence to one
E'er reason has fully begun.
HARK! what dread decree is sounding
'Mid the city's bustling throng?
Why are hearts with fear rebounding,
    Why is hushed the cheerful song?
Hear that monarch's proclamation
    Sounding through the silent air
"Death to every tongue and nation
    That shall bow the knee in prayer."

See, in yonder open chamber,
    Where one bows the humble knee;
Fears he not the threatened danger—
    Heard he not the dread decree?
Thinks he that a monarch's favor
    His defenseless head will shield
From a law that will not waver—
    That to kings will never yield?

'Tis not that the fearful mandate
    Has not sounded in his ear;
Nor that hope of monarch's favor
    From his mind has banished fear—
Well he knows, his mortal body
    Will be thrown to raging beast;
Still he turns unto his duty,
    Bows him to the favored east.
Though he knows with envy raging,
   Men are thirsting for his blood;
He his heavenly Father trusting,
   Bows himself in prayer to God.
While his humble voice he's raising,
   Calling on his Father's name,
Men, with looks of envy gazing,
   Hasten to his guilt proclaim.

What avails that monarch's sorrow?
   He can not avert the doom;
Though he labor till the morrow,
   'Twill not save him from the tomb.
Though his heart were turned to mercy,
   Though be pity for him feel;
The decree of Mede and Persia
   He that passed can ne'er repeal.

Now that man, so pure and holy,
   To devouring beasts is cast;
While that monarch's turning, slowly,
   To his house to watch and fast.
Anxious, waits he for the morning
   Sleep is banished from his eyes
Ready it the early dawning,
   To the cave of death he flies.

With a hopeless voice he's calling,
   Feeling that he calls in vain
Sure, he hears a voice replying
   Beats his heart with hope again
Live, oh, mighty king, forever!"
   Sounds from out that fearful cave
God his servants will deliver,
   He is ever near to save."
With exceeding joy he listens,
   As he hears that faithful voice
Hastes to free him from his prison,
   Hastens with him to rejoice;
While those men with envy burning
   To the angry beasts are thrown
Their revenge is on them turning,
   They but reap what they have sown.

Thus, unwavering, to thy duty
   Forward press and never fear;
Though revengeful foes surround thee,
   Spirit-guards are ever near;
Though the poison tongue of slander
   For a while obscures thy light,
'Twill burst forth in double splendor,
   Scatter every shade of night.
AWAKE MY LUTE

AWAKE, my lute, to songs of praise,
No more attune to mournful lays
  Thy sweet, familiar strings
But sound them now to strains more true,
Cheerful and bright, as rainbow hue
  Glancing from angel wings

Far, far from every earthly grief,
In thy sweet chords I'll find relief,
  And from thee never part;
For when all else was dark and drear,
Thy soothing notes would ever cheer
  My bleeding, breaking heart.

Thou wert my best, my truest friend,
Faithful unto me to the end
  Through all my weary strife;
Then thou shalt not neglected lay
In those bright realms of endless day,
  But wake again to life.

Often, while ling'ring in the form,
Crushed to the earth beneath the storm
  Of earthly griefs and wrongs,
I 'woke thy chords to mournful strains,
Which now on these celestial plains
  I wake to rapture songs.
No more shall sound those notes of grief,
Which often sounded in my brief
    Sojourn within the form;
But here, where all is joy and love,
I'll sweep those chords to bliss above
    And music heaven-born.

Then loud the glorious anthem raise,
Anew the great Creator praise
    In strains that never cease;
And while thy friendly chords shall ring
Of heavenly love I'll ever sing
    In spheres of endless peace.
SHADOWS

SHADOWS on my soul were falling
   When I left the earthly form
Dark and dismal seemed the future
   With no shelter from the storm
That was ever 'round me raging
   Making desolate my path—
All my fondest hopes destroying,
   Overturning in it wrath.

   Why, I know not, o'er me hanging
     Ever seemed a gloomy pall;
Ever drooping to envelop
     All I loved beneath its pall
Even there, so near the borders
     Of the unknown spirit-sphere,
O'er my soul that shadow hovered,
     Filling it with gloomy fear.

Soon I slumbered; then awaking
   From a calm, a sweet repose,
Found that gloomy cloud had vanished,
   With it vanished all my woes
Then I saw bright faces gath'ring,
   Whose long absence I had wept
Then I knew I'd crossed the threshold
   To those spirits, while I slept
Crossed and left behind my sorrows
   With that feeble, worn-out frame
Then I looked, with joy and wonder,
   At the form from which I came
Joyful that my griefs were ended,
   Ended with that parting breath
Wond'ring why my spirit trembled
   Even at the thought of death.

Death, what is it but a blessing
   To the weary, weary heart?
Calling it to brighter mansions,
   Never more from friends to part!
Still we meet it with a shudder,
   Tremble when we feel it near,
Struggle hard 'gainst its advances
   With an agonizing fear.

Near the happy day's approaching
   When mankind the truth shall see,
Look not upon death with terror,
   But as one that sets them free;
Free from sickness, pain, and sorrow,
   Free forever from all grief;
Lead them to that happy country
   Where the weary find relief;

Find relief from every burden,
   On that bright, celestial shore
Sin and folly then forsaking,
   Pressing forward evermore
Then, above, the grave exulting,
   Shout with thy expiring breath—
Oh, grave! where is thy victory
   Where is thy sting, oh, death?
REJOICE for the clay,
When that mansion of clay
The spirit no longer confines
When 'tis free to arise
To its home in the skies,
Where love's light eternally shines.

When a spirit oppressed
Flies away to the rest
It sought for in vain on the earth,
And forgets every wrong
In the triumphant song
That welcomes the new angel-birth;

When it leaves all its fears,
All its sad, bitter tears
Behind with the moldering form;
For bright regions of bliss,
Leaves a world of distress,
And bids a farewell to earth's storm

Why, why do ye mourn
For that spirit's return—
Why wish it again with its cares
See! 'e'en now as it roves
Through those mansions above,
New garments of beauty it wears.
Once 'twas shrouded in gloom,
Deep and dark as the tomb,
Of light not a glimmering ray
Now it dwells with the blest,
And forever will rest
In eternal regions of day.

Once, o'erburdened with care,
And weighed down with despair,
Of hope and of comfort bereft—
Now, 'tis gazing with love
On those angels above,
Forgetting the sorrows it's left.

Then no longer weep
For the loved ones that sleep
Though taken away from thy sight;
For you'll meet them again,
Free from anguish and pain,
In mansions of eternal light.
WE ARE FREE

WE are free, we are free from our prisons of clay
Free, to roam through the regions of eternal day
No longer confined to those gross, earthly forms,
We're safe from earth's trials, far, far from its storms
From its dark storms of passion, its sorrows, its tears
Forever we're free; then farewell to our fears
Never more shall we suffer with anguish distressed,
See our plans o'erturned, all our efforts unblessed,
For from all that can hinder our progress we're free,
Then "right onward and upward" our motto shall be,
Yes, onward and upward to meet the bright throngs
Who will welcome our progress with triumphant songs;
Nor e'en there will we rest, but for ever progress,
Ever gaining fresh knowledge to comfort and bless;
Through scenes ever roaming of beauty and joy,
There we'll first find true happiness without alloy,
And as we press onward in wisdom and love,
While gaining, still grasping for knowledge above,
We will not forget the loved ones in the form
Who still are exposed to earth's pitiless storm;
But gather around to encourage and cheer,
With kind words of comfort from this happy sphere,
While imparting to them sweet lessons of peace
The fountains of wisdom for its will increase—
Forever increase, until we have progressed
Where sin never comes, where the weary find rest
From earth's false-hearted friends, its trouble and strife,
Find rest from its sorrows in eternal life;
Then will we rejoice, that we've gained the bright land,
Nor refuse to those left the encouraging hand.
GONE BEFORE

I AM happy, dearest parents,
    In this glorious world of light
Could von wish me to return then,
    Where day oft is changed to night?

Blissful spirits round me gather,
    Spirits from the heavenly spheres,
And with them I'm near thee ever,
    Ever to dispel thy fears.

Oh, what joy for me to see thee!
    Hear thee! ever near thee stay
But what bliss to meet and welcome
    Thee to realms of endless day!

Oh, what pleasure! oh, what rapture
    With thee o'er these fields to roam!
Never faint and never weary—
    Endless space our future home

Scenes of beauty, ever rising
    Upon the enraptured sight;
Ever changing, ever changing,
    Never hid by vail of night.

Then, dear parents, do not mourn me,
    Think not of me with the dead;
Only gone awhile before thee,
    Through the path that all must tread.
THE CHILD'S PRAYER

HAPPY voices oft are singing;
Words of love are often ringing
Welcome faces, brightly gleaming
Smile upon me when I'm dreaming—
Come they from the courts of heaven
Am I to their keeping given

Tell me if those forms so loving
That with noiseless step are moving,
And my path are guarding ever,
That are absent from me never,
Left those happy, shining bowers
For this world of gloomy showers?

Tell me, for my heart is glowing,
And with love is ever flowing—
I my voice would fain be raising
Their untiring love in praising—
Love Infinite tells the story
Then to it belongs the glory.
INFANTILE DEVOTIONS.

SOFTLY evening shades are stealing,
Where a lovely cherub kneeling,
   Lisps her little prayer
And a look, almost of heaven,
To her angel-face is given—
   Trusting hope is there.

Heavenly Father, far above me,
Though I can not see, I love thee
   For thy kindly care;
Tell me if dear father, mother,
And my little smiling brother,
   In thy presence are?

For around me when I'm dreaming,
Come three faces, happy, beaming,
   And I know them well;
When they come, sweet songs are ringing,
Are they in thy presence singing?
   Heavenly Father, tell."